There were, he said, incitements to outrages in newspapers, etc., and viewing the nature of these incitements the government thought it right to bring the facts to the knowledge of the government of the United States.

The under Foreign Secretary, replying to a question, said that the government had re-ceived no information that any foreign intervention was contemplated in the event of the Prince of Bulgaria not obtaining a majority

Gladstone, replying to a question of Stanhope, Conservative, of which notice was given June 16th, as to whether representations had been made to the American Government in regard to organizations for committing outrages in England, made a semi-humorous speech. He said he was not aware what grounds Stanhope had for speaking of preparations in America for outrages in England. He pointed out that the newspaper incitements by no means limited the commission of outrages to various parts of England, but indicated that individuals were given some pritcular prominence.
